To the United Nations (UN),

I, TIAGO VENTURA COSTA, a Brazilian citizen, holder of CPF number 719.297.891-49, hereby file a complaint regarding serious mass human rights violations (genocide).

There are records of cases in which the same person reported symptoms consistent with Havana Syndrome in multiple geographic locations.

Reports indicate that US diplomats or CIA agents who initially presented symptoms in Cuba also reported subsequent episodes in other international missions, including Austria (Vienna), Germany (Berlin), China (Beijing/Guangzhou), Russia (Moscow), and other locations.

This suggests that the same person may experience symptoms in different geographic contexts.

The report from the National Academies of Sciences, Engineering, and Medicine (NASEM, 2020) documented that some affected individuals presented more than one episode in different locations, which was interpreted as recurrence or relapse of symptoms. In some cases, family members and companions also reported symptoms in the same locations, indicating that multiple people may be affected simultaneously in different diplomatic posts.

US diplomats who experienced symptoms in Havana subsequently reported episodes in Vienna and Moscow.

US government officials affected in Washington DC also reported new symptoms during international travel or post changes.

There is no reliable public data or official statistics that accurately report how many of the ~1,500 reported cases of Havana Syndrome involved the same person in multiple geographic locations. No government report or open database (such as US intelligence publications, scientific reviews, or public documents) presents a consolidated number of "recurrences per individual" broken down by location.

Diplomatic personnel, especially from countries like the US, Canada, and allies, have privileged access to specialized medical care and institutional channels that increase the likelihood of detection, recording, and investigation of symptoms consistent with the so-called Havana Syndrome.

Non-specialized civilian health services would have great difficulty detecting, classifying, or recognizing something equivalent to what has been labeled "Havana Syndrome," in the same way and with the same visibility observed in diplomatic contexts.

The identification of the so-called Havana Syndrome in diplomatic contexts was made possible by institutional surveillance, not by exclusive diagnostic capacity. In civilian contexts, similar symptoms would be classified as common medical conditions, and the absence of detectable epidemiological patterns suggests that there is no underlying unidentified population phenomenon.

Individuals whose cases were classified as Havana Syndrome had access to specialized medical care and institutional investigation mechanisms that are not available to the average civilian citizen.

From a military and intelligence standpoint, it is highly unlikely that equipment, weapons, vehicles, and/or aircraft equipped with directed energy capabilities (DEW) would operate systematically, repeatedly, and globally without immediate detection, leaving traces detectable by modern intelligence services.

An aerospace infrastructure based on satellites equipped with DEW weapons is one of the stealthiest and most easily correlatable ways to conduct a systematic, repeated, and global operation like that related to the Havana Syndrome.

The solution to the Havana Syndrome exposes several state secrets. From a national/global security perspective, the current situation suggests a hidden technological conflict and that the cover-up of these state secrets is occurring through acts or omissions attributable to a state agent or organized actor.

The Havana Syndrome, although involving real and legitimate human suffering, does not meet the legal, evidentiary, and institutional criteria necessary to be recognized as a violation of human rights—AN ABSURDITY!

The Havana Syndrome is a clear violation of human rights, affecting a significant number of human beings globally for almost a decade, and has been neglected as such. This serves as a foundation for prioritizing state secrets over human rights.

I have been denouncing an infrastructure under the responsibility of NATO (North Atlantic Treaty Organization) that is being illegally used by a criminal faction established in Brazil, which is in possession of military equipment for the exclusive use of NATO to carry out attacks against human beings. Such attacks are EXTREMELY consistent with what has been reported by the authorities regarding Havana Syndrome and deserve reinforced attention from the responsible authorities and the United Nations (UN).

I have been reporting the location of the equipment and the perpetrators involved to the competent authorities for three years without any feedback.

I DEMAND the UN's commitment to guaranteeing Human Rights as per current international treaties. A state secret cannot be more important than human rights, ESPECIALLY when these rights are being violated massively and systematically.

The proof of such violations is recorded in the secret state-owned military computer equipment in the possession of ISMAEL HOMEM DE OLIVEIRA. Through this equipment, ISMAEL HOMEM DE OLIVEIRA is able to access a global intelligence and defense network under NATO responsibility to conduct genocide.

The equipment is operating in Brazil, in the city of Porto Alegre - RS, in a civilian area, at the address: RUA GARIBALDI 954 - Apartment 52 - Bairro Independência.

I request that the UN honor its role before the world and take measures to SOLVE THE PROBLEM.

Sincerely,
TIAGO VENTURA COSTA
